

Writing Research, Pedagogy, and Policy

A new series from
Southern Illinois University Press
Series Editor, Elizabeth Wardle

This new series publishes cutting-edge empirical scholarship about writing, broadly conceived, with a particular focus on work that seeks to impact pedagogy, practice, and policy at various levels and locations (K-12, postsecondary, national, and international). The series takes a particular interest in empirical research on writing centers, writing across the curriculum, multilingual writers, assessment, and writing center–library collaborations—all subjects related to the work of the Howe Center for Writing Excellence, which provides financial support for publications in this series.
